Libby Clemens, Director

Thank you for your interest in the HSMS. In the 30 years that I have been teaching, I have always found the Suzuki method to be a fun and rewarding way to teach. The philosophy of positive reinforcement is the best way to motivate and encourage learning and growth. Hard work, discipline and practice are incorporated into an atmosphere of love and support to create the optimum learning environment for the student.

Suzuki teaching combines three essential elements: listening, practice, and performance, on a daily basis. Under the concerned and caring eye of the teacher and parent, the student is taught to love and appreciate the highest qualities of learning and appreciating their craft.

The essential ingredient of successful Suzuki training is the working relationship between the parent, teacher and child. A supportive atmosphere of love and cooperation between these individuals will provide the foundation for learning.

All the children have many opportunities to perform in a supportive and encouraging environment. We have a Festival, solo recitals, and more informal showcases.

*"If love is deep, much can be accomplished."
